Revolution.

For three-quarters of a century, whilst this Government was in Democratic hands, there seemed to be fixed limits to the powers of the Federal Government. Men didn't seek ways and means to nullify or destroy the rights of States by the use or abuse of the powers conferred on the Federal Government.

The revolutionists have found, however how to get along to effect any purpose they desire. How is the Federal Government to fix who shall vote in a State? The process is easy. Congress is to judge of the qualifications of its members, and there is no appeal from the decision of either House in such a case. If the majority determine to confer the right of suffrage upon the negro, they can easily exclude the members of Congress from their seats until the negro votes. In this way Congress can indirectly but effectually determine who shall vote in a State. If a pretext were wanted, there is a clause of the Constitution adapted to the purpose. The United States shall guarantee to each State a republican form of State. government. Congress is to be the judge as to what constitutes a republican form of government, and that body may decide that universal suffrage of white and black

There has never been a question as t the power of a State to charter banks of issue; but the Federal Government has the power of taxation, and may tax the ssues of State banks out of existence. It will not do, however, to allow the States to tax a national bank the same way; because the power would nullify a power of the Federal Government.

Then, in order to nullify more completely the powers of States, it can be asimed that the seceded States are out of the Union-that is, we can assume the right of secession when it will answer the of the legislative enactm purpose. It follows, then, that the territory is to be admitted into the Union as States, and Congress can admit them upon condition that they will consent to abandon some or all of the rights States

In addition to logic of this sort, we have now the war power, that is independent of the Constitution, and may set a part or upon it at all! the whole of it aside, and do what seems rould seem sufficient of itself to accomplish any purpose the revolutionists may omplete and comprehensive.

itations, will be restored, and all these revolutionary doings may be set aside. Therein is the danger. Revolutions can't stop without being fatal to the power, at least, of their authors. They may be written down traitors, instead of patriots, too long, though interesting to Missouriand all their sophistry may be only so many aggravations of their sins.

So the dominant party, having begun a revolution, must go on. They had the States. All outside of that is revolution, and has no basis but power, and to be anctified only by success.

Through the courtesy of an esteemed friend we have received a copy of a brief and clearly-written pamphlet by Mr. Lewis, of St. Charles, Missouri, exposing some of the illegal acts growing out of the adoption of the Drake constitution in that State. The question argued turns upon the application of force, by the Executive, to determine who should occupy the Supreme Bench. The circumstances were that a convention was called in Missouri, for a specific purpose, and proceeded, among other objects not specified, to reorganize the Supreme Court. When this was done, the matter not having been brought in any manner, officially, before the court, the Governor ordered that tribunal to disperse, and the use, &c., and turn them over to the newly-appointed judges.

It can be seen that it involves several interesting questions: The right of the convention to abrogate that court; the right of the Governor to disperse it, and to disperse it by force, with various others, involving the extent of authority that can be exercised by a convention.

The sovereignty of a State Convention for general purposes is one that has been variously construed in many sections to be supreme. It is, indeed, the custom to sponsible, bound by no law, right or preedent. This has been too much the case outside of the doctrine of secession, which was the natural product of the extreme tneory upon which the late Missouri convention proceeded. In the several States every twenty or thirty years it has been the custom to call together a body of a undred, more or less, irresponsible despots or tyrants who are assumed and conceded to be absolutely sovereign over Gov ernors, courts, constitutions, laws and people. Even these acts cannot be exmined, because they are above all exmining tribunals. Upon this theory the Missouri convention and its Governor can be justified, just as the secession conventions of the Southern States could They are not properly conventions, but est simply upon the force necessary to ustain, and fail when it fails. Mr. Lewis, however, points out the fact hat this was not absolutely a sovereignty onvention, and, therefore, has no claim to the extraordinary authority set up for it by its defenders. He gives the legislative act, under which the convention was called, as follows:

called, as follows:

Sec. 5. The delegates elected under the provisions of this act shall assemble at St. Louis on the 6th day of January, 1865, and organize themselves into a convention, by the election of a President and such other officers as they may deem necessary, and shall proceed to consider, 1st. Such amendments to the Constitution of the State as may be by them deemed necessary for the emancipation of slaves. 2d. Such amendments to the Constitution of the State as may be by them deemed necessary to preserve in purity the elective franchise to loyal citizens, and such other amendments as may be by them deemed essential to the promotion of the public good.

Mr. Lewis then proceeds to show that the act of the convention ousting the Su-

"If, however, the people should, by the terms of their vote, decide to call a convention of delegates to consider the expediency of altering the Constitution in some particular part thereof, we are of opinion that such delegates would derive their whole authority and com such vote; and, upon the general principles governing the delegation of power and authority, they would have no right, under such vote, to act upon and propose amendments in other parts of the Constitution not so specified."—(6 Cush., 574.)

The "terms of their vote" alluded to were the terms of the legislative proposition, as submitted to and accepted by the

Does not this opinion—so strictly limitever, in any case, a "precedent" in which the governing principle was more sharply defined, more clearly illuminative of the real merits of the controversy? Surely not. The most shameless quibbler can find no means of reconciling it with the validity of this "ordinance." But there are one or two considerations worthy of will be done at his Headquarters.

are one or two considerations worthy of special note.

It is perceived that the court decides the powers of just such conventions as was ours, to be controlled by the "general principles governing the delegation of power and authority;" distinctly referring to the terms of the legislative call. This puts an extinguisher upon all the demagoguery we have heard about the "unlimited" powers of the convention. It limits the convention to the exact words limits the convention to the exact wo of the legislative enactment. It does more than this—much more than is sufficient for the total demolition of the "ordinance" and its supporters. It declares that such a convention has no power even to submit to the people for their approval any proposition not embraced in the terms of the legislative call. How contemptible, then, does it appear to assert that the convention could adopt as a finality a measure not so embraced in their call, and without ever giving the people a charge to see the sees. ever giving the people a chance to pass not having been so considered by the convention, and if, as is shown by the Massadesire. It would seem quite superfluous chusetts decision, the convention had no to invent constructions of the Constitu- authority to adopt anything but amendtion, when we have the war power so ments, then the abolition of the Supreme Court rests upon nothing but mere forcetremes, the old Government, with its lim- vania. Nay, more; it goes beyond consuch bagatelles. It rests on boes, tan, a convention elected by the people and assembled in pursuance of a legislative act, specifically defining its objects, possess any power to go beyond the objects thus defined? Read how the Supreme Court of Massachusetts answered this question. In 1850 the Legislature of that State solemnly submitted to the Supreme Court the following inquiry:

"Whether, if the Legislature should submit to the people for vote upon the expediency of having a convention of delegates of the people, for the purpose of revising or altering the Constitution of the Commonwealth in any specified parts of the same, and a majority of the people wording thereon should decide in favor thereof, could such convention, holden in pursuance thereof, act upon and propose to the people amendments in other parts of the Constitution not so specified?"

Mr. Baker then addressed the Board on behalf of the contestee. He began by condemning as unnecessary and improper the appearance of the military at the polls, and in strong language denounced the tyranny of Capt. Reed as "cruel and unusual." He defended Capt. Lennin, only in so far as he thought he was not an illegal voter. Lieut. Weaver's action in deposing a judge of the election was wrong, he said, "unless—well, it was wrong anyhow." But he said this military interference was not intended to optary interference was not intended to op-erate against Beall and in favor of Jones. erate against Beall and in favor of Jones. It was intended to operate, as all the proof shows that it was, against the Democratic party, and Beall was not a regular candidate of that party. But hedd not think anybody but rebels were intended to be prevented from voting, and none but rebels were intimidated if they were. He commented at some length on the evidence, made an analysis of it, and contended that if all the voters who were proven to have been kept analysis of it, and contended that if all the voters who were proven to have been kept from the polls had voted for Beall, Jones would still have been elected; and if the race had to be run over again, Jones would be elected by a much larger majority. the then referred slightly to the authorities adduced by Mr. Hallam. Said it was strange he should refer to English authority and go back to the black-letter law, and cite precedents in the dark ages, when plenty of cases in point could be found in the reported decisions of Kentucky. Mr. Baker concluded by invoking the board to respect the expressed will of the people of Campbell county.

Mr. Hallam concluded the argument for the contestant, by saying that his friend, Mr. Baker, did not seem to notice the true and great point in issue. He, too, wished the Board to respect the expressed will of the people, but he first desired that that will should be freely expressed. It was not so in the late election. He cared not if Beall had been elected, even; the late election was void, because it was not free. A New Element in the Manufac-ture of Glass. On a recent visit to the glass factory of John Best, at the corner of Try and Third streets, we saw glass made from a mate-rial first used for that purpose at that establishment. It is known as granular marble, and is quarried from rocks in Texas, Maryland. In appearance, it is not unlike some specimens of salt rock, but more opaque in complexion. In prepar-ing this substance for mixture with the other materials necessary to produce glass, it is milled until it becomes a pulverized powder as fine as flour and as white. In this condition the granulated marble is used to procure a flux, and as a substitute treasury at Washington last week. It was much better executed than any counsame capacity it is much purer than lime. Both lead and lime have been used for the contributes to the making of a superior glass. The result of the practice thus adopted is understood to furnish the market with a better article than is procured in any other manner, except where lead is used, and, of course, at a much

In the ower board it was referred to a committee, consisting of Messrs. Miller, Kaye and Campion. This is a new kick in the gallop of Mr. Henderson, "A resolution authorizing the Assistant Attorney to contract with Isham Henderson, James Guthrie, and others," There is no sense in contracting to build railroads for cars on omnibus wheels. It is all nonsense. The caboose cars (Henderson's recent model hybrid) are admirably adapted for "running around loose," and on the line of road he asks for a double-track, they would suit phemies of the worst sort. At a late much better than cars on a tram rail. We do not discover any merit in the at the corner of Brook and Market project for a railroad to Germantown or streets, in which Jerry Burns and his California. We can see, however, that the people of both places might be benefitted by a line of cars upon omnibus grudge which existed between the parwheels, run upon the graded streets to McMannon,

We rather like the project. The caboose cars could run from Germantown and California in fine style, and immediately out the country, the authorities canupon reaching the Portland railroad not be too careful in administering the could twist and wriggle themselves upon laws to their fullest extent. So we maintain that the people of these of Judge Muir was to sentence him to be two flourishing adjuncts of Louisville hung during the month of August. The would be well served, and tender, doubtless, a vote of thanks to Mr. Henderson for his thoughtful consideration for their comfort and convenience, Indeed they would be charmed with the novel appearance of his double-eliptic, back-action caboose, so closely resembling a street car, but, in fact, a "sure enough" omnibus, adapted to the grade to and from these important points. If properly established, it might make close connection with the arrival and departure of all boats at the Portland landing, day and night, as it has the advantage of running as well on the street as on the rail.

With these cabooses, then, we trust Isham Henderson, James Guthrie and others" will prove a substantial benefit to our suburban neighbors, but we protest against the caboose using Market street, even as a thoroughfare, in making their connections with the Portland railroad at So long as Market street is the regular to the entire community.

This last dodge for a I.O.O.F. meeting in that city. The delerailroad up Market street, in defiance gations on board were as follows: of the public wish, comes in so indirect a shape that the unsuspecting public are to be kept ignorant of the whole matter until the clamp is firmly on them. A resolution authorizing the city attorney to contract with "Isham Henderson, James Guthrie and others"—a beautiful dodge! Mr. Guthrie's name is a make-weight for the project, and we don't propose to have the public hoodwinked in this manner.

The Conncil have repeatedly refused the right of way for a street railroad up Market street, and they will doubtless continue to refuse so long as the markethouses are continued on that street. There is a railroad on Main street and a track is being laid on Jefferson street, then why in the name of common sense have a track on Market street, even if there were no market-houses there, for surely there is no public need of such. The only need of such a road is to accommodate Mr. Henderson's private interest at the expense of the public. He has recently shown, however, by his modern invention of the caboose car that it runs quite as well upon the street grade as upon the rail, and being well adapted to either, if needs be, he can, when it will not interfere with the markets, now and then go down Market and connect with his road

It is nonsense to talk about destroying Market street simply to accomm caboose cars, that are so well adapted to run on the bowlders or the regular street grade and need no rail at all.
